Gevel Zuid/Oost

The image displays four architectural drawings of a modern house, arranged in a 2x2 grid. The top row shows the North/West elevation and a longitudinal section (A-A). The bottom row shows the South/East elevation and a transverse section (B-B). The drawings are executed in black ink on a light background, with some areas shaded to indicate materials or structure. The house has a multi-level design with a prominent central volume and a lower wing. The elevations show a mix of solid walls, large windows, and a flat roof. The sections reveal the internal layout, including rooms, a staircase, and a central corridor. The drawings are labeled with dimensions and room names in Dutch.

A bright, modern interior space, likely a living area or a sunroom. The room features a large window on the left side, offering a view of a wooded area with tall, thin trees and a ground covered in fallen leaves. Below the window is a long, low, light-colored radiator. To the right of the window, a staircase with white steps and a white railing leads upwards. A thick, grey cylindrical pillar supports the ceiling. The floor is made of large, light-colored square tiles. The walls are painted in a light blue-grey color. On the left wall, there is a light-colored electrical outlet. A ceiling light fixture with two white shades is visible above the window.
